Understanding your camera's settings All cameras have controls that allow you to set the following settings: * Compression: This controls the number of pixels in an image. Basically, it determines how much data you need to store so that you can print an image later. Higher compression settings make it easier to store the image. Lower compression settings also make the image smaller, but you can suffer a loss of quality by doing so. It's a trade-off. * Sensitivity: This controls how much exposure your camera's sensor collects, as well as how much detail it captures, which directly affects the colors in an image. For example, you can expose an image to record too much light and have a dark image with very little detail. You can also capture a lot of detail in the image at the expense of needing more light to capture it. You may need to experiment with the settings to find the level that works best for the subject. * White Balance: This controls the color cast your camera applies. Because the color of some objects varies depending on the color of the light in which they're photographed, the color can appear a bit "off" in the image if the White Balance is set too high or too low. To correct for this, open the camera's settings and set the White Balance to a preset or to Auto. (Because your camera's controls are color-coded, White Balance is found under the Display Settings/White Balance menu.) * ISO Speed:

Q: Declaring a type-safe collection? I am currently putting together a small script for my own use. But I came across a small bug which does not know how to solve. In this example, I am trying to find all users on a list that start with the same letter. Note that the name has to be unique and never assigned to multiple usernames at the same time. At first I thought I could just do something like foreach($users as $u){ if(strpos($u,$letter)===0){ $found = 1; } } However, this does not work because by the time I get to the next if statement, $letter has changed to something else (as it's pushed out of the loop). So I tried this function findUsernames($list,$letter){ $count = 0; $i = 0; while($i
