March 4th is the day the federal government is set to cut funding for the CBC, as per budget legislation recently passed by the Canadian government. The Conservatives and Liberals in the Canadian Parliament have both decided to move forward with the budget, which makes cuts to the public broadcaster's budget, eliminates foreign ownership rules for the CBC, and limits the terms of the corporation's directors to just 10 years. The budget was finalized just in time for the CBC in the House of Commons today, March 4th. The budget was supported by the Liberal Party, which still has a majority in the House of Commons. Last week, the House of Commons voted to cut spending on the CBC by $157 million. In total, this means an additional $157,000 in cuts to the CBC. Since last year's budget, $80 million has been cut from the CBC's budget. These cuts, which have been repeatedly justified by the Conservative government, come after all other Canadian broadcasters in the public service have been significantly cut. Here is a list of the main cuts to the CBC that will go into effect on March 4th. Full-time jobs will be cut from 6,500 to 2,900. 40 percent of CBC's English-language programming will be cut. CBC's online presence will be cut down to two platforms. CBC's international network, Radio Canada International, will be cut to four simultaneous 0cc13bf012
