WPA is a standard that allows for enterprise wireless security.² It is a technology used to encrypt wireless networks, to provide access control and to secure data transmissions from a computer to a network. WPA is IEEE 802.11i standard. The use of WPA is a guideline for Internet Service Providers (ISPs) and private businesses to secure their networks.³ It is a requirement for IEEE 802.11i/ii wireless networks. Works with Windows, Macintosh or Linux operating systems.⁴ WPA2 is an improved version of WPA that provides increased security.⁵ While WPA has been in use since 2003, it is a relatively new security system.⁶ It offers increased security and security procedures when used by private and public institutions.⁷ WPA2 differs from WPA in that WPA2 requires the use of AES-CCMP encryption, the PSK of the network to be configured and the use of 4-way handshakes and the use of synchronization on the access points.⁸ [4] [5] [6] [7] [8] Description: Please Wait.
