over the years, the web-shooters and their functionality have gone through many changes. various designs and variations of the web-shooters have appeared in spider-man comics. the most distinct of the designs have been worn by the character, ben reilly. three different versions of the web-shooters have been used by ben reilly: the first design is a pair of wrist gauntlets with a built-in web-shooter. the second design is a pair of web-shooters with the control panel attached to the gauntlets. the third design is a pair of web-shooters on the wrist gauntlets in a push-down configuration. the web-shooters can fire the web fluid for eight seconds, after which they must be fired again to keep the webbing active. the original version of spidey's web-shooters was based on homemade devices that were used by the janus project, a vigilante group of which spider-man was a member. the web-shooters were described in amazing fantasy #15. when ben reilly first began his transformation into spider-man, he adopted a web-shooters-based version of his original costume, modified to allow the web-shooters to be worn beneath his gauntlets. this allowed the webbing to extend down into the wrist area. ben reilly's web-shooters were initially designed by otto octavius. in his own comic-book appearances, peter parker has used wrist-based web-shooters which were modeled after those used by ben reilly. these include the web-shooters that peter parker used in the original versions of amazing fantasy 15 (the same story that introduced ben reilly's web-shooters) as well as the one that peter parker wore in the original west coast story . these web-shooters were designed by peter parker.
